Q33: Read the following passage and choose the letter A, B, C, or D to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions from 51 to 58.

Academics Aren't the Problem
 Studies about how students use their time might shed light on whether they face increased academic and financial pressures compared with earlier eras.

Based on data about how students are spending time, academic or financial pressures don't seem to be greater now than a generation ago. The data show that full-time students in all types of colleges study much less now than they did a generation ago- a full 10 hours a week less. Students are also receiving significantly higher grades. So it appears that academic pressures are, in fact, considerably lower than they used to be. The time-use data don't suggest that students feel greater financial pressures, either. When the time savings and lower opportunity costs are factored in, college appears less expensive for most students than it was in the 1960s. And though there are now full-time students working to pay while in college, they study less even when paid work choices are held constant. In other words, full-time students do not appear to be studying less in order to work more. They appear to be studying less and spending the extra time on leisure activities or fun. It seems hard to imagine that students feeling increased financial pressures would respond by taking more leisure.

Based on how students are spending their time, then, it doesn't look as though academic or financial pressures are greater now than a generation ago. The time-use data don't speak directly to social pressures, and it may well be that these have become more intense lately. In one recent set of data, students reported spending more than 23 hours per week either socializing with friends or playing on the computer for fun. Social activities, in person or on computer, would seem to have become the major focus of campus life. It is hard to tell what kinds of pressures would be associated with this change.

Q41:

Read the following passage and choose the letter A, B, C, or D to indicate the correct word or phrase that best fits each of the numbered blanks from 41 to 45.

Postsecondary institutions and private schools are corporations under U.S. law. They are approved to operate as non-profit, for-profit, or public corporations (41) _____ education and training. Increasingly, state authorities are requiring approved educational providers to apply for and receive accreditation as a condition of final and continued approval. As corporate entities, U.S. institutions are internally self-governing and are (42) _____ to make property, facilities, equipment, and utilities transactions; make their own personnel decisions; decide whom to admit to study and to graduate; raise their own funds from outside sources; enter into contracts and compete for grants; and do most of the other things that corporations do. Institutions compete (43) _____ one another for students, research funding, faculty, and other benefits. Public institutions may compete within the same state or territory for budget appropriations. It is the corporate nature of institutions and the competition within the system that causes Americans to refer to the concept of the educational or academic marketplace – an important distinctive element of the way U.S. education is organized. Some institutions are governed (44) _____ under multi-campus arrangements. These include most local public schools (governed by school districts) and many state community college and university systems. Whether single- or multi-campus, institutional corporations are controlled by boards of citizens, both alumni and non-alumni, who are ultimately responsible for all operations. They appoint senior (45) _____, such as principals, headmasters, presidents, and deans; and approve the actions taken in their name.
